

The story of a Hartford gentleman who lost $100 in bills, and remembering that he had the money lost at his butcher's, went there to learn that just after he had left a man came into the shop to make a purchase. He felt in his pocket as if he had lost something. Then looking down he saw a roll of bills on the floor, picked it up and counted it. There was just $100, and from it he paid for what he had bought. A week later the second person returned the $100 to first, with the following strange explanation: On the day referred to he had been out to Windsor to collect some money, and in his haste to return to Hartford thrust it, $100 in bills, as he supposed, into his vest pocket. When he went into the market above referred to, he naturally felt for his money, and missing it, looked around for it, and saw the roll on the floor, which he supposed was his own. He had used it during the week, and only that day had he put on his working coat. While at work he wanted a match, and in feeling through the pockets of his coat, to his astonishment he found the $100 he put there instead of into his vest pocket. As soon as was possible he went to the market to see if any one had lost that sum of money, and this led to a general settlement all around. He did not know at that time that he had been suspected of the theft, and did not imagine that he was in danger of arrest.

So decides the Supreme Court of the United States. The ruling affirms the constitutionality of a tax upon secured credits, and that these are taxable at the place of residence of the creditor, and not where the money may be loaned. The decision is expressly that a citizen of Connecticut who loans money upon real estate in Chicago is taxable in Connecticut upon the mortgage. Thus the highest authority in the country puts a long mooted question at rest.
